The Biomass Energy Processing Program will train students for the growing industries in processing of agricultural commodities. While the emphasis may be on processing corn into ethanol and soybeans into food grade soy products and soy diesel, the equipment used, concepts studied, and skills will be applicable to many agricultural processing plants and processes. At the completion of the program, the student will have the skills to be employed in one of the many opportunities in the agriculture commodities processing industry or continue their education at a baccalaureate granting institution. Watch our Web site: www.iowalakes.edu for courses to be offered.

SUSTAINABLE ENERGY

The Sustainable Energy Resources Management Program is designed to prepare students for a future career in the management of sustainable and renewable energy resources. To accomplish this, students will be exposed to a wide range of science, technology, business and general education courses. This coursework will allow students to graduate with the knowledge, skills and practical experience they will need to pursue their career goals in this new and rapidly growing industry. In this program students will obtain the specific training and instruction necessary to successfully enter the workforce or transfer to a four-year college or university. Watch our Web site: www.iowalakes.edu for courses to be offered.
